

BOTSWANA

Alone in the Heart of Africa

Despite the Covid pandemic, Annemarie Koelliker and Roberto Saibene managed to undertake their planned trip to one of the most original regions of the Black Continent. For three weeks they travelled around by jeep, boat, dugout canoe, small airplanes and mainly stayed in tents and lodges in the middle of the Savanna. They were almost the only tourists in the country.

On many lengthy safari tours in the Okavango Delta and other National Parks they could admire the rich fauna from very nearby. Timid felines and countless hoofed animals offered impressive encounters repeatedly. Furthermore, the largest population of elephants lives in Botswana. Watching these pachyderms was one of the highlights of the trip. The numerous, colourful birds were a further surprise to them.

The Multivision show takes the spectators through wild and romantic landscapes with deserts, savannas, swamps, impressive watercourses and offers close-up views of the rich, African fauna.
